Adobe Illustrator Adobe Illustrator is a vector-based drawing and graphic editor that is capable of producing highly professional vector graphics. It is a good cross-platform graphics editing tool that supports transparency layers and layers that can be grouped together into a collection. Illustrator supports more than 50 page layouts (such as newspaper page layouts) and more than 100 object types, such as shapes, pen strokes, patterns, and text. It also supports predefined gradients and patterns. Illustrator has its own drawing and editing interface that is easy for beginners to learn and use.

Inspired by the US event management program of the same name, Event Expedition is a 12-week business development and leadership training course that combines the best of motivational talks, exercises, and interactive workshops. Through an innovative curriculum, we offer participants a one-of-a-kind event management training bootcamp that will bring your career to life and open up the door to a new career in event management. EVENT EXPEDITION's UK chapter is run by Emma Baliunas, who completed a degree in International Business Management. Emma later worked in the boutique hotel industry before completing an Advanced Management Master's in Retail Management. She says Event Expedition is the perfect place to grow your business skills and has helped her to enhance her event management skills and develop a stronger foundation in business management and leadership. Emma is so excited to bring our program to the UK that she is offering discounts for any current Event Expedition students who are interested in attending her bootcamp. I was with 6 students from all over the UK on the bootcamp in London at Pink Sweets, the largest venue in the city. Each week was a new challenge; every presentation and exercise taught us something new that was relevant to our business and made us sharper event managers. It's helped me develop new skills in public speaking, coaching and communication, and has helped me to get my head above water and secure a much better job in Event Management. I couldn't recommend this course enough and if you are in the UK, you should attend. Emma is a great speaker who inspires you, gets you to think differently, and gets you to do it all over again! She's also completely insane. — Jenny Whelan, event manager at Indigo I had heard about Event Expedition from my sister, who was a participant in a similar Event Expedition program in the US. When she told me about their innovative and fun seminars and classes, I wanted to attend. They helped me to turn my dreams of being a product stylist into a full-fledged event management career. Q: Get the state of a focus-able element As we know the last input element on the page has the focus, through javascript. When onclick on some button, I don't want it to act like the first element. Is there anyway to determine the state of an element through javascript? e.g. If the above element is not focused. A: Not likely that you'd be able to detect whether a given element has focus via javascript, but you can use the element's tabindex attribute to determine whether it has focus: function isElementFocused(element) { return (document.all && element.tabIndex!== -1) || (element.setAttribute && element.tabIndex); } var btn = document.getElementById("btnId"), focused = document.querySelector("input[tabindex=0]"); document.getElementById("btnId").onclick = function(e) { alert(isElementFocused(focused)); } A: You can detect any element if it has focus. Here's an example on how to detect if it has the focus if(document.activeElement) { alert('The element has focus'); } else { alert('The element does not have focus'); } The city of Galt started the day having never heard of Tom Klancher. Then they saw a wall of water come down the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad tracks. "I was in the middle of a meeting when I heard that the road was running near the Union Pacific. And I said, 'Can we go out and look at that?'" says Galt City Councilman Craig Simpson. "And we found out that it was a wash! I was really amazed that we could go out and see a little bit of something that had never happened in town before." Like it, or not. It was an opportunity for Galt to see its own worth, to strike at the heart of a dirty little secret, and change, hopefully, the way we think about places. Like that big eraser that dings out the names on the wall, and changes the way the city looks. The old Galt Before the flood, Galt

Phil Bryant on Friday criticized the "extreme left" and "extreme right" for the number of television ads bought by outside interest groups as part of the 2018 campaign. (Dec. 12) Bryant calls state government in 'strange' ad Buyers push back Bryant accused groups of 'extreme left' and 'extreme right' Bryant criticized groups during a speech on Friday at the Mississippi Press Association State Conference JACKSON, Miss. — Mississippi Gov. Phil Bryant has been quick to blast anyone he thought was trying to influence his state's six ballot initiatives in June, but he's not as fast to declare defeat in his latest ad campaign. The Republican governor's latest attacks were made Friday in an address to the Mississippi Press Association, the state's top news-and-opinion magazine. While he was acknowledging his re-election win in a quick speech without reporters in the room, Bryant sought to put some distance between his campaign and a pair of ad buyouts from two groups he believed were represented by outside interests. He likened both sides to the never-ending debate over taxes and federal money in Mississippi. "As a Democrat, a Republican, a conservative or a liberal, it's interesting to hear the things they say. More to the point, it's interesting to hear the things they don't say." he said. He scorned both of the groups, the New Media Initiative and Yes on 1, and accused
